WASHINGTON, July 20, 1887.

WHAT SEVEN YEARS HAVE DONE.

We're such a thing possible, what's a remarkable production it would be could the exact impressions made on Governor Shepherd's mind yesterday have been photographed as he rode about Washington and noted the munificent improvements made since he left here over seven years ago?

When he departed the Capital City was in a deplorable condition, and the Richmond is soon looked for.
What the particular object of this naval demonstration in the waters of the St. Lawrence may be does not appear, but, judging by the courtesies exchanged yesterday between Commander Chester and General Middleton, under the frowning batteries of the citadel, grim visaged war that loomed so ominously over the Canadian little while ago must have taken a back seat.

"The remedy is with Congress," says the Cleveland Leader. How?

Let us endeavor to put our case without a censorious particle from the United States authorities, give it at the port whence he sells.
Let no counsel be allowed to stand against him, but, if such is the character, you will, by your own admission, be as much to blame as he is.

"I've been thinking some time," the young man's father said.

"Twenty is a good thing or a bad thing," said his son.

For you, sir, to go to the sea,

Where the water's saline and quite potent and free.

"Algeron, you'd better go there and stay in the salt water day after day,

For fear, sir, that salt is your greatest foe."
